As in paragraph development, sequencing provides a "flow" of ideas and a coherent pattern of development to an essay. However, whether that sequencing is chronological, spatial or emphatic, it still approximates a narrative thread--only with ideas instead of story events and characters--and readers like their essays to appear to have a narrative structure just like a good story.

Three Ways To Conclude an Essay

1 Restate your thesis statement. Restate your thesis statement. Do not use the same words, but recast the sentence. For example, if your thesis statement is, "America needs a monarchy," in the conclusion, try, "Although the United States' founding fathers rejected it,
